Vancouver has filed a second lawsuit against Chevron for the financial losses it incurred in the wake of the fire at its Burnaby refinery in 2013. The money claimed by Vancouver is more than $200 million. In the early hours of April 9, 2013, a large fire swept through the Richmond refinery, causing an explosion that destroyed one of the plant's six crude-processing units. As a result, Chevron was forced to shut down the facility. The city filed suit against Chevron in April 2015 for $3.5 billion. At that time, it included money for increased emergency-response costs and the cost of construction of emergency centers, plus the alleged lost value of taxable property. The matter is before B.C. Supreme Court. Chevron has not yet filed a defence. On February 3, 2016, Vancouver filed a notice of civil claim for lost income and punitive damages, and an amended notice of civil claim for lost income, lost profits, and punitive damages. The city's 2018 motion refers to five cases in B.C. Supreme Court where the city "sought a declaration that Chevron must pay for its response costs, and for damages to natural-resource-related businesses including loss of business income". A key point in the motion is that Chevron "has all along identified each of the causes of action, counterclaims, and issues to be raised in this action as having the potential to result in a payment to the City." According to the motion, the "latest assertion of counterclaims represents a wholesale re-alignment of the City's claim." The city's amended notice includes a legal argument that "Chevron owes the City for lost business income based on the nature and
