I am trying to do this with Java 8: Map map = new HashMap(); map.put("first", "Alice"); map.put("second", "Bob"); map.put("third", "Tom"); map.put("fourth", "Joce"); map.put("fifth", "Tommy"); And I would like to sort it like: // Map of key values map.get(first).get(key); map.get(second).get(key); map.get(third).get(key); map.get(fourth).get(key); map.get(fifth).get(key); But I want to be able to do this with the minimum of code changes: // The map Map map = new HashMap(); // The sorting map.sort(function); ... // My

------------- Ancestron is a tool which enables you to easily search thousands of names with just a few clicks. It gives you two methods of searching: the first one is the classic search, also known as phrase search, and the second one, the search by keywords. It is a very easy program to operate, as soon as you download and install it on your computer. You can input your surname into the program's search field and let it do the rest. It will immediately start searching for mentions of your surname on various websites and forums, such as genealogy databases and online family trees. Within a few seconds, you will be able to look at the first page of matches and decide if you want to click on any of the names, or if it is just a coincidence. At any time, you can go back to the previous screen and try another surname, or even look at the results of the previous search to see if you have more information. You can also change the order in which your results appear by simply re-ordering the table rows. You can export any of the links you found to your default web browser, with one click of a button. You will have all the necessary information to take any action. For example, you might want to try to trace one of your matches, or maybe you just want to create an online family tree. Ancestron App has a basic document editor in order to create documents about your family, so you don't have to go to any other tool, such as a specialized tool like TreeExchange or Geni, for that purpose.
