. Lastly, please get it over with.” “I’m sorry, yeah. I don’t mean to get you all worked up. I’ll just be on my way then.” The driver sped off and the baby cried again. “Please don’t cry.” I found myself sinking to my knees with exhaustion. I guess it was time to actually consider the other possibilities. It wasn’t like I had a spare pot or two of coffee. I didn’t even have enough money for coffee. I also didn’t have any cash on me. It was time for Plan B. Maybe I could just leave. I have the money I’d stolen at the coffee shop, so I could at least start over somewhere else. I didn’t even want to consider the other people who might be involved in this situation. I was hoping the baby would stop crying soon so I could try and sleep again. I didn’t even want to think about what would happen if the baby was really hurt. What if the driver came back? Or what if he found his car with the spare car seat still in the trunk? I couldn’t risk it. It was better to just leave now. “Can I borrow your baby?” At first I thought it was a joke. “Hey, no way, I don’t have a baby to loan!” “It’s okay, I don’t want her. Just let me take her. Please.” As I was thinking about my options, I had started to cry. I would never do anything that would hurt a baby. It wasn’t me. I didn’t do things like that. “Okay. Fine.” She did put the baby in the back seat and handed me the baby carrier. I was glad I was getting her out of there. I just wished I could get to my car. I was going to be more careful next time. Share this: Like this: As I was driving to the grocery store, my mind was working overtime. There was a book due next week and I couldn’t think about anything else. The crazy part is that the deadline is actually in two weeks a1d647c40b
