What's New in the HABit Wordstar Converter?

Habit word star converter is a Windows application to convert files written and edited in Wordstar (Aero,Plus,... iExec is an open-source framework and innovative cloud-computing project that aims at providing access to computing power, for free or almost for free. It relies on the Ethereum network, including its decentralized smart contracts and DAO. iExec is aiming at being as efficient and light as possible while delivering a powerful framework of decentralized services through smart contracts. Trial version of this software available for 30 days. Software is free to use for non-commercial purposes only. See License Agreement for additional details. Key Features: - Smart Contracts for cloud computing services - Distributed application programming interfaces - Access to hardware drivers - Agnostic to application programming language - Secure and stable environment - Provides a fully functional implementation of the Proof of Stake protocol This software implements the Proof of Stake consensus algorithm: users are free to stake their coins and to vote through their stake (in the form of locked coins). This way, iExec users will be able to provide computing power to the network and earn a reward in staked coins, while receiving all the benefits of a public and decentralized network. What is Staked Coins? Voting on iExec occurs through a Proof of Stake protocol. With this protocol, users can, by staking their coins, vote on the outcome of a smart contract. Staked coins are "locked" in a specific amount and can only be used to conduct transactions in the iExec network. Users receive some of their staked coins as a reward for participating in the network. However, an increasing portion of the total supply will be released and redistributed among stakers with a decreasing amount of coins for every vote they cast. A. Network Voting Nodes of the iExec network are currently controlled by users. When a smart contract that will require computational power from the network is introduced, every node that has staked coins for voting in that smart contract will be able to cast a vote for the contract outcome. Users receive their vote reward, in the form of staked coins, proportional to the amount of coins they have staked in the specific contract. A small number of nodes (between 2 and 5, as of yet) have the right to control the outcome of all contracts. To obtain this control, they simply need to deposit 10,000 or more coins in a specific contract. In this case, nodes are issued
