The patterns of temporal and spatial progression of apoptosis and activation of intrinsic pathway signaling molecules in response to ischemia and reperfusion injury were determined in the penumbra of the middle cerebral artery occlusion (MCAO) model of stroke in the rat. TUNEL-positive apoptotic cells were observed immediately after reperfusion, peaked at 4-6 h, and were present at 24 h after onset of reperfusion. Large numbers of TUNEL-positive cells were seen in the infarct core at 24 h, and were still present in the corpus callosum at 48 h after stroke onset. The influx of activated caspase-3 was restricted to the infarct core immediately after reperfusion, whereas in the ischemic penumbra there was a gradual increase in the abundance of activated caspase-3 and the initiation of the intrinsic pathway (Figure 3A). In the core, the abundance of active caspase-3 increased to 12 +/- 2 by 1 h and then decreased at later time points, suggesting the presence of apoptotic neurons and oligodendrocytes. In the penumbra, the abundance of active caspase-3 increased up to 6 h, after which it remained relatively constant (Figure 3B). In the core, the abundance of active caspase-8 increased to 4 +/- 1 at 2 h, remained increased at 4 h, decreased at 6 h, and then started to increase again at 24 h (Figure 3C). In the penumbra, the abundance of active caspase-8 was relatively constant at 2 h, then increased up to 4 h 1cb139a0ed
