Advancements in radiation technology have resulted in improved locoregional control and decreased toxicity for most malignant solid tumors. However, radiation toxicity still remains a problem in these patients. With increased knowledge of the complex interaction between the tumor, radiation, and normal tissues, the cancer care team can refine the technique of radiation therapy to obtain the best results in the individual patient. Techniques that may minimize radiation toxicity, such as complex fractionation regimens, brachytherapy boost, accelerated hyperfractionated regimens, and dose escalation, may be considered if concomitant with the development of precise imaging methods to identify target and critical normal tissues. This article briefly describes the recent literature relating to different radiation techniques used to decrease toxicity and the potential impact of radiation on the skin.Semplice Semplice is a comune (municipality) in the Province of Alessandria in the Italian region Piedmont, located about east of Turin and about southeast of Alessandria.
