Effects of a wide excision on the septum pellucidum. To verify the effects of a wide excision on the septum pellucidum (SP) in lesions associated with spina bifida. This study involved 59 fetuses with SP, 41 of which presented the Chiari II malformation (CM) and 18 the Chiari I malformation (CM). The control group included 36 fetuses with normal SP who showed no developmental anomalies. Microsurgical resection of the SP was performed in 27 fetuses. A liquid acrylic resin was used as filling material and the SP was covered by a silicone membrane. The SP was not removed in 22 fetuses. Post-operational magnetic resonance (MR) was performed in all fetuses. None of the fetuses in the control group presented any anomalies. In fetuses with SP associated with CM, 68% (19/27) showed developmental anomalies, whereas 26% (7/27) showed minor associated malformations. In CM cases associated with SP, 77% (19/24) showed anatomical anomalies. The tegmentum was more frequently affected than the genu (50% versus 12%, respectively). The SP was removed in fetuses with CM associated with SP. Ten cases (71%) of developmental anomalies were observed. In fetuses with CM associated with SP, the SP was removed and the malformation was corrected. Post-operative MR demonstrated persistence of SP remnants in 50% (11/22) of the cases. In fetuses with CM associated with SP, such wide excision of the SP results in a decreased incidence of developmental anomalies. Surgery, however, does not affect the malformation.¹

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a track-recording medium, a recording method, a recording apparatus, a recording method, and a computer-readable recording medium.

2. Description of the Related Art A typical recording medium used for an optical disc is formed by a high-reflection film on a transparent plastic substrate, and a record bit is formed in accordance with the information pits formed on the high-reflection film. In order to correctly read out the information from the record bit, the information recording device has to irradiate a light beam of the appropriate optical intensity and frequency. That is, in order to record and/or to read out information, the recording medium is irradiated with a light beam by an information recording device (a semiconductor laser, an optical pick

Lakeview Ridge Boys The Lakeview Ridge Boys (also known as the Lakeview Boys or Lakeview Boys & Girls) are a Scottish/Danish musical group who appeared on the UK television talent show New Faces in 1976. Career The band, composed of drummers Mike Yossifoff and Johnny Gough, both of whom had worked with Harry Nilsson and as guitarist for Starsound, had originally been formed as a backing unit for singer-songwriter Susan Boyle. They had only performed a few minor local appearances at the time but, after being offered a place on New Faces, they quickly gained a reputation for energetic, slick and hard-hitting, dance oriented soul dance music. It was a big hit, eventually reaching number one in the UK Singles Chart, even topping the Top 40 in both the USA and Canada. The band continued to make a number of appearances on later UK TV shows including Band of the Year and Stars in their Eyes, and they are well known for their track "Lazy" from their second album, Doin' It Right which was later re-recorded by British new wave band The Buggles, who reached number two in the UK Singles Chart in March 1979 with the song. They also made several appearances in the UK charts with other singles such as "I Need To Feel Your Love Tonight", "Grooving With You" and "Love Can't Wait" as well as several appearances on the long running BBC TV Top of the Pops music video programme. Despite their success in the UK the band never achieved the mainstream success of their American counterparts, and the band eventually split up in 1982. Singer Darren Morissette later launched a solo career with success, with his debut album charting in both the UK and US.
