Pepwave Surf SOHO MK3 watchdog is a program designed to automatically reboot Pepwave Surf SOHO MK3 routers when they lose connection. If you happen to have a Pepwave Surf SOHO MK3 router and you are having problems with the stability of the connection, then there is a good chance you might be looking into a new device. In the eventuality that you are not considering switching manufacturers, then maybe you are looking for a way to reboot the router automatically. Pepwave Surf SOHO MK3 watchdog is a tool designed to automatically reboot Pepwave Surf SOHO MK3 routers whenever they lose connection. According to the developer, the idea behind the utility is to monitor your Internet connection by pinging three different providers. In case all ping attempts fail, then the app proceeds to reboot the device. Setting up the program can be slightly tricky for less tech-savvy users, meaning that you need to access the config file and add the router password there first. At the same time, you need to run the InstallPlink.bat file included in the archive to the System32 directory to enable access. It is worth mentioning that you can configure additional settings within the RR.exe.config file using your default text editor. More exactly, you can set a daily reboot at a precise hour and minute, set the ping interval in milliseconds or add the router IP and port, as the password is mandatory as previously mentioned. Or is there anything else we may be missing? Leave a comment down below!YouTube announced Monday that it has blocked a small number of extremist videos from appearing in some users' recommendations. The move means that YouTube will no longer automatically play a new video from a channel in the 'Recent Videos' section of a user's profile. But more videos from those channels will be available to watch from a homepage on the site in the future. The move came after a YouTube user and then a British newspaper reported that a small number of videos from the channel alhurra.tv -- which promotes an extremist Islamist viewpoint -- were not appearing on the site. A statement from YouTube says that the videos were not blocked at the request of any parent or broadcaster. "Although we have not found any copyrighted material, the videos have also sometimes been reported for violating YouTube's policy against spam and misleading viewers," said the statement. "While we're confident our automated systems would have picked up this behavior, we elected to take these videos out of our recommendations for now to prevent them from being consumed by anyone seeking this content." It is not the first time that YouTube has been accused of allowing extremist content to appear in its recommendations. A number of videos from the al-Muhajiroun jihadist network were blocked in April after they were posted by YouTube's recommend system. According to the company, the "inadvertent" removal of extremist videos was an "incident." The company claims to remove videos from its "suggestions" system based on a
