In 2003, AutoCAD 2004 (for Windows) was released. With this release, AutoCAD introduced the Web Application Interface (WAI), which is a web-based user interface (similar to Adobe Flex for web applications). This allowed programmers to build interfaces for AutoCAD with a familiar programming language, such as Visual Basic, which was a good fit for users who were familiar with it. AutoCAD 2007 was released in August 2006. AutoCAD 2008 (for Windows) was released in February 2007. The latest version is AutoCAD 2010 (for Windows). On April 15, 2010, Accellera, a consortium that develops and manages open standards for system-level computer-to-computer communication, released the Open Architecture for System Interconnection (OASIS), specification version 1.0, which specified a standard for communications between Autodesk applications. This included the Autodesk COM API, which allows the use of a COM library for any application written for Microsoft Windows. In particular, it allows the interchange of drawing objects, which had previously been limited to drawings from the Autodesk Design Suite, DesignCenter, and 3dsMax. Mac OS X Leopard supported AutoCAD from release 2009 on. AutoCAD 2012 (for Windows) was released in September 2011. The latest version is AutoCAD 2013 (for Windows). On August 19, 2013, Autodesk released AutoCAD LT 2015 (for Windows) for use on systems running Microsoft Windows 7 Service Pack 1 (SP1) or higher, or Windows Vista Service Pack 2 (SP2) and higher. Police at Portland State University said that protesters who appeared to be communists were chanting "Lumpen proletariat" and held up "portable American flags" during an event that was attended by nearly 300 people on Thursday night. The leftist group has spread throughout the country. "There is an organizational structure to the protests," Portland State University student Brady Chase said. "They know each other, they know their roles." During an event at Franklin Pierce University in New Hampshire, a leftist mob tore down the U.S. flag and put it on the ground. A leftist mob of at least 100 people gathered at Seneca College in upstate New York to protest President Donald Trump and Confederate monument statues.
