Indigenous buffalo meat is typically eaten with a dressing or sauce. It is also used for meatballs, sausages, and biltong. Indigenous buffalo meat is obtained by herding the animals up a mountain near the end of the mating season. The herders then chop off the hind leg of the buffalo and let the animal bleed out. The meat is then cut into steaks before being hung in a meat locker. The steaks are aged for six months prior to distribution and consumption. It is among the hardest of all meat, and with a high fat content, indigenous buffalo meat
