What's new in Fantasy Grounds - 1 On 1 Adventures 10: Vengeance Of Olindor (3.5E):

My buddy's group is on a quest to destroy a trio of powerful monsters they've encountered that came up from deep within the ruins of a ruined colony in eastern Faerun. While they aren't particularly difficult foes on first encounter, the PCs are dreadfully underequipped to deal with them and they've decided to call on me for backup. Bait is safe for now. The Monster Olindor was a devout miniscule of Saeeh, his people's god, who cursed his people's flesh with the constant blistering effects of punishment. On the brink of extinction, the parched miners fled the lush, humid region on The Agori Isles. They settled into the ruins of some ruined cities in the east and paid little heed to the magic that constrained their people's blood. Then disaster struck. Twice. The storm god chose to bless the sea with a terrible tidal wave and river of fresh water. That helped the colonists grow their crops. But then the god-beasts rose to torment their floating cities and almost choked their channels with silt. Twice more the god-beasts - creatures of ghastly, unknown power - assaulted the dilapidated settlements, putrefying magics trapped within the hulls of the bobbing boats. The god-beasts were relentless - tearing the roofs off beloved docks and crushing whole towers into oblivion. Howling with glee, the gods begged for more and more of the colonist's flesh. The groans of their people rose like the blood of a gushing river of roadkill. The end came fast and swift. The settlers dried up and died. Each one of the cursed men, women and children bled out, their smoldering souls dying and vanishing before their bodies drew heat from the sun. The god-beasts returned again and again, crushing and gnawing at the few that survived. The settlers were reduced to salt and bones, their flesh and spirits and magic alike drying up into a hateful, unyielding dust. Finally, none remained - but the gods were still not satisfied. The tortured lands were loaded with so much magic that it choked the unnatural, cruel creatures. The gods' final feast had begun and the god-beasts were starving. Yet twice more they came through the sail-skies, their savage ears and eyes bleary with hunger, their teeth dripping from a fire they'd eaten black, burnt chum. And so the gods gorged on the colon
