Developed by EA Sports' Game Development division, "HyperMotion Technology" allows players to perceive the ball anywhere on the pitch. Players in game are able to move and interact with the ball in a more natural and responsive manner.

The technology also influences a number of gameplay characteristics, such as movement control, player footwork, ball control and reactions. The game features up to 4×4 teams made up of up to 22 players, 25 superstars and 12 All Stars. There are also 3v3 battles available for select matches. In addition, in the Ultimate Team Champions Cup mode, there are special rules to experience a tournament with up to 24 players. "We believe this is the first time anyone in the world has motion-capture technology to create the realism of how the players move. This achievement is a huge leap forward for gaming and we have created an experience that gives our players an unprecedented level of freedom and control." Said Patrick Gerber, vice president, FIFA at EA Sports. "The atmosphere and atmosphere of a football match has never been captured so realistically than in EA SPORTS FIFA 22. FIFA has always been at the forefront of innovation and we have been particularly inspired by the vision from the EA SPORTS FIFA development team. The incredible realism and immersive physics combined with 'HyperMotion Technology' will revolutionize how people play and enjoy FIFA." The "HyperMotion Capture" isn't the first time EA has used motion capture technology to simulate the human body and movement. Last year, FIFA was the first sports video game to create a player that's as responsive as a real person. Now that the first game is released, we expect this year's version to run smoother than in the past. We've made course changes in some key areas to ensure that the game is more realistic than ever before. We have developed a brand new way to play in tight spaces, such as the midfield, with the introduction of AI-controlled teammates, and we've made significant improvements across all match types. These gameplay innovations are complemented by a new and improved Career Mode, which lets you play the game the way you want to play it, and new Stories that present a new story to FIFA in each of the core modes. Is there anything else you can tell us? In line with our commitment to innovation, we have also improved artificial intelligence (AI) so that players move more like real footballers in the key areas of the field, and behaviours reflect improvements such as the quicker pace of play. In one further change, individual goalkeepers will now use two hands when first punching the ball into play instead of just one. What will Australian gamers be able to do?
