Doing that on an MFT file will certainly give some fun results. Now, the '\0' will cause the string not to be null terminated, so... Why it's not null terminated? Because it's not a normal file. It's a MFT. MFTs are not normally copied or written to disk in any other way than to a directory. Normal NTFS is not designed to just copy a directory around. Normal NTFS is designed to read and write files which are already on disk. It's not designed for the directory to be moving around all the time. An NTFS MFT really only ever has two uses. It can be used to identify a directory when looking up files. Or it can be used to identify the head of a non-seekable, non-indexed file. Which

Ever since I began shooting, when I make a new movie I try to imagine I'm at the premiere. Making the film, the editing, the archiving, the presentation. Even though the movie will be watched in 5 years it still means a lot to me. A lot of thought goes into the presentation and I think it's a little bit absurd that we're just in the middle of the internet. It's also really important for me to make sure that everything in the final presentation is in focus. I have to know that if I was to burn a DVD with the movie on there or put it on an USB stick it would look good. The first time I watched the movie online I was really excited, because it was a major change. Since then I've watched more and more movies on the internet and so now it's much more normal. I like watching movies on the internet. I like being able to watch movies whenever, wherever, as long as I have an internet connection.
