Q: How to temporarily convert the video output for a PDF (from landscape to portrait) A question about the video output on my touch display: I got a MacBook Pro, in which I use both a touch display (Model: Apple LCD Touch Bar 13") and my laptops built-in display (Model: Apple LED Cinema Display). I would like to enjoy videos from different sources on both displays, for instance YouTube on the touch display and the built-in display for other stuff. If I want to watch a video, however, I have to use the built-in display, because the touch display seems to be oriented the wrong way: the touch display text is oriented to the left (like an iPhone), but the built-in display has the text right-aligned (like an iPad). The model for my touch display is as follows: Model: Apple LCD Touch Bar 13" [...] Apple, Inc., Apple Patent No. 8,600,457 For as long as I know, I can only choose the orientation for the touch display by touch. This only changes for selected videos (preferences→more system preferences→Displays). I thought this would be enough to define the orientation, because many people told me I can use the rotation support for videos. Unfortunately, it seems this support only works for presentation of videos (e.g. screen sharing), but not for regular videos. Is there another way to let Photoshop match my videos, or another way to change the orientation until I restart the system? (of course, I would like to avoid this) A: You can change the orientation in System Preferences. Alternatively, your video provider will have the tool to change it. If they allow it, you can use Adobe Primetime if you want to change between the orientation of presentation (which covers presentation for all sorts of media) and normal viewing. You can also automate that with Applescript if that's more convenient. A: I am not sure if there is a way to do this with the system preferences (to my knowledge) - although I don't think that you really need to resort to this if you've got access to the Adobe Primetime app for creating presentations and similar. It appears to be a relatively new program. So at the present time there is no option to do this within the software and the only solution that is currently available is to use Adobe's Primetime app
