Democratic presidential hopeful Beto O'Rourke takes the stage on the second night of the first Democratic debate, on July 31, 2019 in Detroit, Michigan. Sen. Amy Klobuchar's campaign acknowledged on Tuesday that it was ending its ties with Rep. Eric Swalwell's presidential campaign. A spokesperson said Swalwell's decision to withdraw from the race on Monday removes Klobuchar as a potential general election opponent. Swalwell, who has spent far less time in the first Democratic debates than some of his rivals, announced Monday he would bow out of the 2020 presidential race. The news was first reported by NBC News. Klobuchar's campaign manager, Chris Lu, said in a statement that Klobuchar welcomed Swalwell's decision. "Amy has always focused her campaign on doing everything she can to beat President Trump in November. She has committed a significant amount of time and resources, and appreciates his contributions to the cause," Lu said. Klobuchar appeared on stage for the first time at Thursday's debate in Detroit, where she spoke about her plans for economic and environmental issues. She cited plans to raise taxes on the rich, pass a federal minimum wage of $15 an hour, renew bus routes in rural communities, defend reproductive rights and address climate change. Swalwell has called for the U.S. to cancel student debt. He has also pushed for a federal program to pay for back-to-back housing costs for people with mental illness. Swalwell announced his departure from the race just over a week after launching a campaign video in which he said he wanted to "build a movement." His decision came after Swalwell appeared to have been cut off during the video's first commercial break as the camera lingered on the congressmen appearing between the CNN moderator and the stage. But, just weeks after formally declaring he was running, Swalwell was left off the debate stage after the first two nights. The two highest-polling senators — Klobuchar and Bernie Sanders — were kept out of the first two nights' debates because they haven't been able to get the minimum 20-percentage-point support needed to participate. Swalwell is next to last in the field in polling from Iowa, which will hold its caucuses in February. While most of the Democratic contenders have made multiple trips to Iowa

The Daily Herald (Tucson, Arizona) The Daily Herald is a daily newspaper based in Phoenix, Arizona, United States, publishing seven days a week with an approximate circulation of 37,000. It is owned by GateHouse Media. History The Daily Herald was established in Phoenix in May 1982. The newspaper was founded by E. William Blackman, who at the time was a publisher with The Arizona Republic, a suburban newspaper published in Phoenix. He purchased the first edition of The Daily Herald on May 7, 1982, using an inheritance from his father and $2 million in venture capital from a venture capital firm, Media Capital Partners, which ultimately led to the purchase of the newspaper. Blackman sold the newspaper to The McClatchy Company in June 1995, after losing a bid to purchase the rival Arizona Republic newspaper from the company. The McClatchy Company merged with Knight Ridder to form McClatchy Newspapers in 2003. The McClatchy Company sold The Daily Herald, the Daytona Beach News-Journal, and three other daily papers to GateHouse Media in 2011. As we have hereinbefore shown this is not the case, the record amply supports the judgment of the trial court on the matter of wilful neglect. 9 Defendant also urges as the second basis for the reversal that the trial court erred in its refusal of a continuance of the trial and the granting of the motion of the state in support of its motion for a speedy trial. In this connection, the defendant had appeared in the case without legal counsel after being offered such assistance by the court, as was permitted under the law of the State of Indiana. It was the defendant who elected to act as his own attorney when he appeared before the court without counsel
