Plasmonic antennas for coherent energy transfer in multilayer systems. We investigate a coherent, electromagnetic energy transfer (EMET) phenomenon in the ternary metal/metal/substrate (MMMS) system where a local surface plasmon resonance (LSPR) is excited on a metal nanoparticle (MNP) which is resonant with the bulk LSPR of the adjacent gold layer. An analytical model based on the coupled dipole approximation (CDA) is developed to investigate EMET and radiation patterns in the MNP medium. The EMET efficiency is found to be enhanced significantly by the nanoparticle presence, and for a multilayer system is found to be size and frequency independent.Q: Unable to download TFS build agent deployment files I am working on TFS2017 agents build definition.
