ACR Appropriateness Criteria® Gallbladder Imaging: Ultrasonography. Ultrasonography is the imaging modality of choice to assess the gallbladder as an etiology for non-specific abdominal pain. It is a noninvasive test that can be performed in an outpatient setting. The sensitivity of ultrasonography in the detection of gallstone disease is high, but the specificity is relatively low. In terms of missed stone detection, the rate is about 5%, and the need for biliary-enteric intervention in such cases is very low. While the development of new high-resolution ultrasound technology and improved training of clinicians and technologists has improved the diagnostic accuracy of ultrasound, it is still operator-dependent, and thus the results are still not always reliable. This limitation is illustrated by the findings on randomized controlled trials in which sensitivity and specificity varied significantly when the same technology and study protocols were used. This work includes the 2015 American College of Radiology Appropriateness Criteria® guidelines on Ultrasonography of the Gallbladder. Appropriateness criteria were generated by the ACR-ASP Joint Councils for Clinical Imaging Appropriateness (ACR-ASP JCCI) Work Group on Ultrasound. This document is intended to help radiologists select appropriate imaging examinations and it is not intended as a practice guideline or to define the standard of practice. Early follicular phase serum inhibin A and follicle-stimulating hormone concentration in unexplained infertility. To compare follicle-stimulating hormone (FSH) and inhibin A in the early follicular phase in unexplained infertility patients undergoing controlled ovarian hyperstimulation and the resulting follicles evaluated with transvaginal ultrasonography and the number of oocytes recovered. Prospective cohort study. Reproductive endocrinology and infertility clinics. Forty women with unexplained infertility undergoing controlled ovarian hyperstimulation. Controlled ovarian hyperstimulation, oocyte retrieval, and ultrasonographic evaluation of follicles. Follicle-stimulating hormone and inhibin A serum levels. Hormone concentrations and the number of oocytes recovered after controlled ovarian hyperstimulation. The FSH and inhibin A level in patients who ultimately became pregnant were significantly higher than those in the group that did not conceive. The number of oocytes retrieved in the group that became pregnant was significantly higher than that in the group that did not become pregnant. The FSH and inhibin A levels in patients who ultimately became pregnant were higher than those in the group that did not conceive
