So this is basically what I need to do, if I can find a good way of doing this. A: You can try create your own CounterType like: / * The buildId is a String (representing a unique buildid) to identify * unique events. It is typically not used for diagnostic, it should be * user defined. */ CounterType.Builder counterTypeBuilder = new CounterType.Builder(Scope.Global, Type.integer); counterTypeBuilder.setName("buildId"); / * The minQuantum is the lowest possible event value we will count. */ CounterType.Builder minQuantumBuilder = new CounterType.Builder(Scope.Global, Type.long); minQuantumBuilder.setName("minQuantum"); / * The maxQuantum is the highest possible event value we will count. */ CounterType.Builder maxQuantumBuilder = new CounterType.Builder(Scope.Global, Type.long);maxQuantumBuilder.setName("maxQuantum"); / * The fieldName is the name of the field within the MBean. If not * provided then it will default to "count" */ CounterType.Builder fieldNameBuilder = new CounterType.Builder(Scope.Global, Type.String); fieldNameBuilder.setName("count"); / * The fieldType is the type of the CounterType. This is set to * "long" by default */ CounterType.Builder fieldTypeBuilder = new CounterType.Builder(Scope.Global, Type.long); fieldTypeBuilder.setName("count"); / * The java.beans.PropertyChangeListener allows application code to detect * and respond to changes in the value of this CounterType. To use this * interface to add an EventListener, use the getPropertyChangeListener * method. * * @see #removePropertyChangeListener 648931e174
