We report the fabrication and opto-electrical characterization of a new type of mid-infrared photodetectors based on hybrid metal-semiconductor InAs/InAs-based core-shell photonic nanowires. The nanowires are grown on heteroepitaxial InAs substrates employing a selective-area metal-assisted chemical-vapor-deposition technique. A strong focusing of the electromagnetic field into the GaAs cores was achieved using the nanowires geometry. In particular, the strong confinement of the light in the core can enhance the photocurrent and provides a more sensitive mid-infrared detector with an external quantum efficiency as high as 76% at 1.5 µm. a significant risk of strong hostility toward a defendant and its impact on the jury. The procedure is also limited in the evidence it will allow, such as admitting a jury'
