A U.S. House committee on Friday sought emails from a Gmail account belonging to former White House national security adviser Michael Flynn that went missing as a result of hacking. The House Intelligence Committee said in a letter that it is seeking an "electronic communication." from Flynn's Gmail account, which was hacked and put out on the web. The committee is seeking a copy of "the electronic communication." from Flynn's Gmail account, which was hacked and put out on the web. The committee is seeking a copy of "the electronic communication of which is attached, from your Nov. 15, 2016, through May 18, 2017," it said. The committee previously sought those documents, including drafts, documents and emails from Flynn's private Twitter account, from Dec. 2, 2016, through May 18, 2017, which has a proper to the electronic communication officials about his communications with Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak. The committee's announcement came as Yates and Flynn have faced negative scrutiny over their accounts of their last moments as national security adviser and the people they told about their interactions with Russian officials. His British counterpart Sir Philip Hammond said the compromise deal w
