There is very little that I would consider as good as the first game, with it being a little easier, but only slightly, not enough to be anything like frustrating. I would recommend this game to any avid driver, for it gives that adrenaline rush you have been waiting for. After completing the Prologue campaign and earning 50,000 Pimlico Road bonus points, youre free to enter online multiplayer, which will allow you to compete against people with a similar level of skill to your own, or you can join online or offline tournaments where players complete their races in a set amount of time, or within a set amount of money. Theres also a career mode where players work their way up the ladder, progressing through series and championships, earning money to buy new cars, or new sponsors to show off in them. You can even race your car in drift mode, so race along a large set of tracks. Theres also online racing tournaments where you can race on a track against opponents. To win you need to be faster, so there are no points gained or lost on this mode, but you can bet on who you think will win the race. This is particularly fun because your time is limited.
