Based on the experiences of the University of Amsterdam English Department, the scope of this project will be ambitious. As one example of what is in store: In addition to online access to the vast collection of occult and alchemical books, graphic re-creations of each of the 1,617 digitized volumes are part of the project; some of these are also put in PDF form via a data hosting service. To top it off, the Ritman has digitized and made available an impressive collection of early editions of classic literary works -- from Shakespeare to Boccaccio -- that make for wonderful texts to read in their original languages. And all of this is accessible completely free of charge to the public! More to come on this fascinating project, including perhaps some comment on our own experience of the first 600 of the more than 1,500 volumes that we have digitized, when we have time to update this feature. In September we posted a short introduction to the University of Amsterdam English Department English as a Second Language (ESL) digitization project. In response to our experiment in multilingual digitization, the Ritman Library agreed to digitize the entire collection of their alchemical, occult, and magico-religious literature. This collection includes books from the University Libraries and the various private collections of Het Oude Geheime, the Ritman Library, and members of the Departments of European and Applied Languages of the University of Amsterdam. In all, the project has digitized over 3,000 pages of rare and elusive texts. Many of these were in PDF form, making them accessible to the public, but with the help of a generous donation from Amsterdams best-selling author Dan Brown, the project has been able to take this step a bit farther. From today, August 16th, the 1,617 volumes being digitized are now freely available online, for free, in their original languages. Alchemical and occult texts by Johannes Trithemius, Francois Troisi, Albrecht Dieterich, and Johannes Bureus are just some of the many subjects covered by the project. 5ec8ef588b
