Proudhon, Alain, tr. The Life and Times of an Anarchist. The devil in our midst Sihler, Erik ; Dahl, Gunn (2011-11-20). The socialist movement in India in the modern era : from the turn of the century to the present day.1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to newly identified polynucleotides, polypeptides encoded by such polynucleotides, the use of such polynucleotides and polypeptides, as well as the production of such polynucleotides and polypeptides. More particularly, the polypeptides of the present invention are human leukocyte serine esterases. The invention also relates to inhibiting the action of such polypeptides. 2. Related Art There are more than 2,000 human leukocyte serine esterases encoded by an estimated 24-33 genes. Several of the esterases are also encoded by genes of viral genomes. The esterases are expressed by polymorphonuclear neutrophils ("PMNs"), monocytes, macrophages, mast cells and eosinophils and are involved in a wide variety of biological processes including, but not limited to, degrading toxins and pathogens, synthesizing essential hormones and lipids, generating and activating oxygen free radicals, and clearing and degrading apoptotic cells. Esterases also degrade the synthetic lipid mediators and bioactive lipids of arachidonic acid metabolism. Additionally, some esterases are involved in desquamating, hair growth and the pigmentation of the epidermal layers. PMNs are the predominant source of most of the esterases that are expressed in human blood. The majority of esterases expressed by human PMNs are produced in the cytoplasm, while a few are also expressed by the plasma membrane. Many esterases are found on the external surface of phagocytic cells. Esterases have been identified that degrade the components of both the outer and inner membranes of pathogens, including complex carbohydrates, phospholipids, cholesterol, and lipopolysaccharides. Some esterases may affect the differentiation and/or activation of innate and adaptive immune cells, for example those related to triglyceride synthesis. Other esterases could be involved in covalent modification of small molecules such as amino acids, glutathione and melanocyte-stimulating hormones. Recently,
