difference between "the other" and "another"? Examples: Is there any difference between "the other" and "another"? Can anybody help me with the answer to question 1? A: "The other", used as a direct object, generally refers to a person who is not known by the speaker or listener, e.g. "The other person is making my life difficult". "Another" is usually a word that is not the subject of the verb, and so usually refers to a person or thing that is known by the speaker or listener, e.g. "My second preference is another light beer" [even though I like the other, you know, the light beer is second on my list]. If there is a need to refer to one person as "another person", the preferred expression is "the other". In your example, the other person may be thought of as someone like my first or second preference, but the light beer is presumably someone like the third or fourth. The other is used in phrases of comparison. The other indicates that the person, object, or thing being used is different from what it appears to be. The other can be a complement of a noun or a noun itself, e.g. "a good/bad car", "a good/bad man", "a bad/good idea", "a
