We studied the distribution of human apolipoprotein (apo) B- and E-containing lipoproteins (B and E particles) in plasma of normal (n = 4) and hyperlipemic (n = 11) subjects by using a combination of analytical ultracentrifugation and radioimmunoassays. The normal subjects were not taking lipid-lowering drugs. The hyperlipemic subjects had high plasma levels of total cholesterol, triglycerides, and apoB-containing lipoproteins, but had low-density lipoprotein (LDL) cholesterol concentrations within the normal range. By analytical ultracentrifugation, B particles were found in two fractions (fractions II and III) with buoyant densities of 1.070
